Dear Chairs Granger, Murray, Womack, and Van Hollen, Vice Chair Collins, and Ranking Members DeLauro, Hoyer, and Hagerty,

As privacy, child, and consumer advocates, we write to strongly urge Congress to ensure that the Federal Trade Commission has the requisite budget to enforce the FTC Act and the 82 other statutes Congress has assigned it. By legislative design, the FTC is the only independent federal agency with dual missions: Protecting American consumers and promoting competitive markets across the economy. Yet, there has been a growing mismatch in congressional funding and the resources needed to carry out these responsibilities. We urge Congress to appropriate at least $590 million for FY ‘24.¹

There are ample justifications for this funding level.

Emerging technologies have become ubiquitous in our daily lives. At the same time, the rate of technological advancements has astounded even the tech industry. (On March 22, 2023, tech leaders called on all AI labs to immediately pause the training of AI systems that are more powerful than ChatGPT-4). Yet, emerging technologies have been deployed with few, if any, safeguards to Americans’ privacy or security. Moreover, an FTC study shows that these technologies are controlled by a shrinking number of firms. Protecting consumers and promoting competition have never been more critical and more challenging.

From 2020 to 2022, fraud increased by over 150 percent resulting in $5.3 billion in losses. During that same period, FTC conducted over 50 percent more premerger antitrust reviews (from 1,637 to 2,496. Yet, the Commission’s budget went from $331 million to only $376.5 million, barely a 14 percent increase. The FTC cannot protect consumers and promote competition without the necessary funds to carry out such important functions. We strongly urge you to ensure the agency has the resources it needs to do its job by appropriating at least $590 million for FY ‘24.
